

Computational Physics

Semster Project Proposal

Jeffrey P. Hafner

Wednesday, January 30th

Abstract

I would like to create a traffic flow model using cellular automaton. Using cellular automata will be advantageous because it will have the ability to take into account the random aspects of traffic flow. I will then compare my results to the various techniques discussed in the literature.

References

J. Wahle, L. Neubert, J. Esser, M. Schreckenberg, "A Cellular Automaton Traffic Flow Model for Online Simulation of Traffic," Parallel Computing (1999). <http://citeseer.ist.psu.edu/306638.html>

Samuel W. Malone, Carl A. Miller, Daniel B. Neill, "Traffic Flow Models and the Evacuation Problem," (February 12, 2001). www.math.duke.edu/news/awards/student/mcm2001.pdf

Bing-Hong Wang, Yvonne-Roamy Kwong, and Pak-Ming Hui, "Statistical mechanical approach to Fukui-Ishibashi traffic flow models," Phys. Rev. E 57, 2568 (1998).

E. Ben-Naim and P. L. Krapivsky, "Stationary velocity distributions in traffic flows," Phys. Rev. E 56, 6680 (1997).

Kai Nagel, "Particle hopping models and traffic flow theory," Phys. Rev. E 53, 4655 (1996).

Xingzhi Zhang and Gang Hu, "1/f noise in a two-lane highway traffic model," Phys. Rev. E 52, 4664-4668 (1995).

Kai Nagel and Hans J. Herrmann, "Deterministic models for traffic jams," Physica A 199, 254 (1993).